Islander first in area to use new cancer treatment

Written by Leslie Kelly/Bainbridge Island Review

Sometimes the answer is in your own backyard—or very close by. When Garret Ihler of Bainbridge Island learned last March that he had prostate cancer, he went looking for the best possible treatment. As a former professor of medicine at Texas A&M University, he recalled reading something about a new procedure called SpaceOAR on a website called MedPage. So he began researching where he could get that treatment. He found the answer just minutes away at the Peninsula Cancer Center in Poulsbo . . . continue reading

Poulsbo's Viking Avenue seeing rebound

Written by Tad Sooter/Kitsap Sun

It's taken time, but more drivers are rolling into ABRA Auto Body and glass on Viking Avenue. The shop struggled to get noticed when it opened in a former Courtesy Chevrolet building in 2013. "It's been a slow grind, but it's picking up for sure," manager Jason Hunt said Friday. Picking up in part because life has returned to the properties that once made up Courtesy Auto Group's Poulsbo empire. The final Courtesy Auto dealership closed in 2011 and the land slid into receivership, leaving large chunks of Viking Avenue vacant. Since then, all six Courtesy Auto properties have sold, freeing space for new businesses to . . . continue reading
