WWU at Poulsbo will add bachelor's degree program in cybersecurity

Written by Kitsap Business Journal

Western Washington University's Board of Trustees has approved Western's 2015-16 operating budget, which includes funding for a new cybersecurity program at Olympic and Peninsula colleges. The state Legislature appropriated $1.5 million in its two-year biennial budget for the program, which will offer baccalaureate degrees in computer and information system security. The program will be . . . continue reading

Poulsbo woman, 96, completes 16th novel

Written by Rachel Anne Seymour/Kitsap Sun

Kyra Petrovskaya Wayne never knew her father, a Russian pilot during World War I. He was shot by a Bolshevik firing squad after the Russian Revolution when she was a toddler. Although she never knew him, the stories she heard and shared about him shaped her most recent book, "Against All Odds: Russian Nobility in the Crucible of War and Revolution." . . . Kitsap sees building boom for single-family homes

Written by Tad Sooter/Kitsap Sun

. . . Poulsbo's building boom continued unabated. The Viking City issued 72 permits for new houses by the end of June. By the end of July the city had issued more SFR permits than it doled out in all of 2014. Homes are being constructed on half-dozen large-scale residential plats in Poulsbo, with more in the planning pipeline. "There's never a dull moment here," Poulsbo certified permit technician Cherlyn Haley said. Haley said many developments now under construction were approved years ago but stalled during the recession, only to be revived as the economy . . . continue reading
