Popup stores part of holiday shopping season

Written by Terri Gleich/Kitsap Peninsula Business Journal

. . . The answer turned out to be pop-ups, the now-you-see-them, now-you-don't stores that open for a season and then disappear. Popular nationally since the 1990s, the concept is being embraced by several Kitsap entrepreneurs to expand their markets with minimal investment or risk . . .

Fish Park's hidden gem

Written by Peter O'Cain/North Kitsap Herald

With the exception of a small salmon mural along the sidewalk, the Lindvig Way bridge is about as ordinary as any other bridge—a gray mix of asphalt, concrete and guard rails. The understorey of the bridge, however, is far from ordinary. Poulsbo muralist Jim Mayo is using the walls beneath the bridge as a canvas for . . .

High school program offers taste of restaurant business

Written by Terri Gleich/Kitsap Sun

It's 10 a.m. on a Monday and student chefs in the Odin Inn kitchen are baking ciabatta bread, grating carrots for salads and marinating salmon for the smoker. . . It's all part of North Kitsap high school's culinary arts program, which operates a self-sustaining public restaurant for weekday lunches and has added a farm-to-table component that is transforming . . .
