Tourism marketing for Kitsap extends its reach

Written by Kitsap Peninsula Business Journal

For an assessment of the state of tourism in the Kitsap Peninsula region, we set up a Q-and-A with Patricia Graf-Hoke, executive director of Visit Kitsap Peninsula. VKP is an economic development organization responsible for promoting the region to . . . continue reading

Dirty Hairy's: New owner, new look for Jensen Way salon

Written by Sophie Bonomi, North Kitsap Herald

Like her business's namesake, Emily Kramer is packing some serious heat. But her's is a pair of scissors. And the atmosphere of Dirty Hairy's is more like Boston's "Cheers" than Inspector Harry Callahan's gritty San Francisco streets. Kramer is the new owner of the hair salon, on 19132 Jensen Way NE. Hours are from. . . continue reading

These Shelter Dogs Love Starbucks As Much As We Do

Written by Olivia Harrison/Refinery 29

Starbucks is a great pick-me-up in the midst of a hard day, and if anyone knows what a hard day feels like, it's a shelter dog. Pups living in shelters get love from employees, volunteers, and other occasional visitors, but waiting to be adopted must make for some long and lonely days. That's why Kitsap Humane Society has a weekly tradition of treating a lucky dog to some well-deserved Starbucks. Now, these doggies aren't getting. . . continue reading

Co-op hopes to spread fresh veggies countywide

Written by Tad Sooter/Kitsap Sun

Lisa Hurt spent two decades molding a raw piece of North Kitsap land into the tidy farmyard she tends today. She hacked back the brush, tilled garden plots by hand and built herself a house, all while working construction and painting jobs to pay the bills. Her garden offered up more produce than she could use, so she gave veggies away to friends and donated to food banks. It wasn't until recently Hurt considered marketing her hard-earned bounty. . . ## Poulsbo company gives homeowners a lift

Written by Tad Sooter/Kitsap Sun

The staircase that meanders from the Parker residence down the precipitous bank to their beach doesn't see as much use these days. That's because the Bainbridge Island couple had a much easier route down the bank installed last year: A steel tram suspended on galvanized cables and powered by an electric winch. The . . .
